Area Highlights
Young Conservation Area is located in north Jefferson County. To reach the area, from Eureka, take Route W south, then go 3 miles west on Route FF. The original 970-acre tract was acquired through a donation and purchase by the Conservation Department in 1986. Since then, several tracts have been added to the area. The area is about 93 percent forested with oak, maple, hickory and other species native to this region. Deer, turkeys and squirrels are abundant. LaBarque Creek, a permanent stream running along the northern portion of the area, is known for its high-quality riparian ecosystem. Glades, restored woodlands, tree plantations and open fields provide diverse wildlife habitat. Two hiking trails traverse the area. During your visit, you may view forest improvement practices designed to improve wildlife habitat, maintain watershed quality and enhance tree growth, quality and species composition. Wildlife habitat management practices include maintaining fields in native vegetation, edge feathering, planting trees thinning woodlands and using prescribed fire. Fish habitat improvements, protecting stream banks and planting trees along the stream corridor have been implemented along LaBarque Creek.
